Section	Description
Project Overview	The machine learning project aims to detect fraudulent transactions based on transaction characteristics. Using a dataset with features such as transaction type, amount, origin and destination balances, and customer ID, the objective is to build a model that classifies whether a transaction is fraudulent. This helps financial institutions strengthen security and reduce losses from fraud.
Data Collection Plan	• Search for datasets related to online transactions and fraud detection. • Prefer datasets with labeled examples of both fraudulent and legitimate transactions. • Ensure inclusion of various transaction types (e.g., cash out, transfer).
Raw Data Sources Identified	The raw data for this project is sourced from an open dataset on online transaction fraud, commonly used in data science platforms such as Kaggle. The dataset contains a mix of transactional features like type, amount, oldbalanceOrg, newbalanceOrig, oldbalanceDest, and isFraud, representing real-world financial transaction flows and fraud status for analysis.
